Local Businesses Learn How To Thrive in a Difficult Economy

develop services and products to solve those problems, and then effectively advertise them to the community. In the example of a restaurant, it helps its customers solve the problem of being hungry, he said.

No matter how difficult the economy is, business owners are responsible for their own success, Mr. Bonura said. When sales decrease and ad campaigns fail, many owners feel helpless and give up. But there are still many steps businesses can take toward success, and one of them is to evaluate their customer service and their marketing approach.

Even if sales decline as much as 20%, he advises, owners must focus all of their efforts on the 80% that remains. That is an element of proactivity, he said, and also an element of success.

Many who attended the seminar were impressed with Mr. Bonura's program.

"I'd give it an 'A+', really. He's very interesting," said Kevin Barret, secretary for the DeTour Economic Development Corporation. The metaphors and stories Mr. Bonura used throughout his speech were easy to understand and made his points well, Mr. Barret said.

St. Ignace Chamber of Commerce President Cheryl Schlehuber was also impressed with the seminar. Mr. Bonura conducted one of the best business seminars she had ever attended, she said.

The free program was sponsored by Michigan Press Association and hosted by The St. Ignace News. It drew participants from several communities, including Sault Ste. Marie, Cheboygan, Cedarville, Hessel, DeTour, Newberry, and Alpena.
